

An Opaque War

In the complex, highly ambiguous war on terrorism, the task of connecting the dots is complicated by differences of perception and motivation brought to the process by the participating and sometimes competing organizations. In the first of his Intelligence Community novels, Frederick Harrison explores the interaction of the CIA, FBI and NYPD in pursuit of a terrorist plot in the harbor of New York City during Fleet Week. It is not clear that there are dots, much less how they are to be connected. The reader becomes involved in following the players, both friend and enemy, as their lives and events move toward a dramatic and explosive finale.
